GREEN DESIGN OF THE NEW WASTEWATER RECLAMATION FACILITY

Construction of the new Wastewater Reclamation Facility (WRF) is scheduled to begin towards the end of this summer. The Village of Deerfield Wastewater Reclamation Facility will be a true pioneer in sustainable "green" design and will be among the first of its kind to apply for the U.S. Green Building Council's Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED®) registration.

The WRF administration building is looking to achieve LEED certification for energy use, lighting, water and material use as well as incorporating a variety of other sustainable strategies. LEED certification of the facility will be based on a number of green design and construction features that positively impact the plant itself and the broader community.

The project will include native prairie plantings put into the acreage surrounding the plant to attract and provide habitat for wildlife that will minimize the need for mowing, fertilizer and watering. Pervious pavement is part of the plan to minimize stormwater discharge. It absorbs rainfall and prevents excess runoff into storm sewers.

The administration building will be served by a geothermal heating and cooling system. Additionally, the building will include other energy efficiency initiatives such as LED lighting and occupancy sensors.

By using less energy, LEED certified buildings save money, reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and contribute to a healthier environment for residents, workers and the larger community. The construction is anticipated to be completed the beginning of 2012. ♻️
